

The first few weeks in the uk

It's been now seven weeks since I left Switzerland. Time is passing so fast here it barely feels like a month. I really start feeling at home here and my English is getting better too.

After the first two weeks of school in Totnes, I moved to Newton Abbot. Newton Abbot is a small town between Exeter and Torquay. I am working for an international entertainment company called Scarlett Entertainment. We are organising different acts for the events of our clients all around the world. Their main offices are based in the UK, UAE and USA. I work for the French sales team, this means that I am helping write the proposals for our French clients. Due to this I have to talk in French which is quite hard to be honest. The thing I like most about my job is that I can contact different artists to get a quote of them. Sometimes they are even quite famous or at least you've already heard about them. For example I could talk to Madox who is one of the best beatboxers in the world and performed at the Open Air Frauenfeld this year.

The team at Scarlett is really open. There are some other interns from Spain, Italy and the Netherlands and a lot of young employees. On Fridays we all go out together for drinks to Jolly Farmers, which is kind of the meeting point for young people in Newton Abbot.

The weather here is not that bad yet so I try to visit as many places as possible in south Devon. There are some nice places at the beach like Dawlish, Torquay or Exmouth.

Our whole group who are staying around Totnes went together to go coasting near Torquay on bank holiday Monday. We jumped down from cliffs up to 7 meters high. I loved that experience because I've never jumped down from something this high. PURE ADRENALIN !

Last Weekend, Nadine and I went to Newquay in Cornwall. Newquay is titled as the surfer paradise from the UK. On Saturday we took some surf lessons and explored the town. The surfing was absolutely amazing even though we couldn't do it properly at least we had lots of fun. We stayed at a surf lodge in an amazing room with a direct view at the sea. In the evening we went out with some Spanish interns from my work who stayed in Newquay that weekend too. On Sunday we went to the western beach and just enjoyed the clear water and the white sand.

I am really looking forward to spend the next five months here and then moving to Bordeaux. I am so happy I had the chance to spend this year abroad and I can absolutely recommend it to everybody.
